Language Note

- English-speakers often use compliments to start a conversation with someone they are getting to know. For example, a person might compliment another's sweater or jacket to start a conversation with that person.
- For English speakers, when someone compliments your clothes, it's common to then share a small detail about the item. It is similar to talking about the weather —the topic is used as a greeting and a conversation starter. A conversation about someone's clothes is not meant to be too personal or to make anyone uncomfortable.
