Detecting Incomplete Plosion

In connected speech when a plosive consonant like /k/, /g/, /t/, /d/, /p/, /b/ is followed by another consonant, it is not fully pronounced. This is called incomplete plosion.

Here are some examples that incomplete plosion will take place in a word.

- Incomplete plosion at the junction of the words: black k coffee, a t table
- A plosive is followed immediately by another plosive: good d girl, bad d boy, perfect ct
- A plosive is followed immediately by a fricative: best tseller, have a good d rest
- A plosive is followed immediately by an affricate: a good d job, a big chance

Listen and repeat after the recording, paying attention to the letters in bold.
