2. I always think that introverts are quiet, shy, even a bit anti-social, while extroverts are active, loud and often quite popular.
3. • The content of the video definitely changes my original thoughts about extroverts and introverts. They are just different temperaments. To think that extroverts are better than introverts, or the other way around, is a misunderstanding to say the least.

• The content of the video is actually quite similar to what I originally thought about extroverts and introverts. In fact, I have friends who are seen as introverts. As an extrovert, I get along well with them. We make great teams working toward a common goal. So I believe the knowledge about these two temperaments is not a complete mystery to me.

Many people see "introverts" and "Chinese" going hand in hand. They think that I am introverted because I am Chinese. It's true that the Chinese education system encourages students to score high in exams, and the students are less used to classroom discussion and debate compared to American students. However, among the Chinese students I studied with, some are good at socializing, some are brave enough to raise questions. These people are confident and fierce, and these qualities that they possess are needed to become lawyers, journalists and politicians. So, I don't think I'm introverted because I'm Chinese. I am a person who enjoys reading and prefers to observe and put those observations into my writing. I'm introverted because I am me.

Unit project 1-3

Reference:

Dear Jiaming,

The other day you mentioned that you felt confused recently. It seems to me that you and I had similar issues. So I decide to write this letter to share with you what I've been through and how I dealt with this problem.

According to the common understanding, the word "introvert" is associated with "shy," "awkward" and even "anti-social." Ever since I was a child, I was labeled an "introvert." The internal message of this label can be harmful. For example, whenever there was a class discussion, I could hear the voice in my head, "Why don't you just sit in the corner and remain silent, as nobody would expect you to say anything?" This voice got louder and I ended up being invisible.

However, I have realized that it's the sense of guilt that bears negative message: You are not popular. You should just give up. Guilt is worthless in terms of getting you to do things. So, as introverts, how do we free ourselves from "introvert" shaming?

When you feel guilty of being an introvert:

1 Evaluate your personality. How do you gain your energy? Do you enjoy deep thinking and reflecting upon experiences? If the answer is "yes," you are most likely an introvert. Seeing yourself clearly is the first step in the pursuit of happiness.

2 Accept yourself. If you evaluate your personality and decide that you are an introvert, feel good about it. Sometimes, hanging out with yourself is the greatest pleasure.

3 Make it work for you. Now that you've accepted yourself, make your introversion work for you. You can start by reading empowering books on introversion. In the meantime, reach out and share your challenges about being an introvert with trustworthy friends.

As you can see, "introvert" shaming can only bring negative influence to your emotions and actions. So, next time when you hear people judge you or even criticize you for being an introvert, tell them, "I'm an introvert, and there's nothing wrong with that." But more importantly, tell yourself, "I am an introvert and I am happy."

Best wishes,

Rose

Would you identify yourself as an introvert or extrovert? You can find people of either type in most workplaces, and the particular traits displayed by each personality mean that they tend to work in different ways. Extroverts are assumed to be more suited to jobs that involve teamwork or communication with other people. However, jobs that allow the individuals to work independently are better for introverts, who are more studious and prefer to work alone.

In recent years, there has been a surge in the number of foreign tourists in China. Most of them are attracted by China's glorious natural beauty; some want to have a taste of its splendid cultural heritage and a handful come to search for exciting and adventurous distractions. Some economists attribute the rapid growth of foreign tourists to the great efforts of Chinese government. In the past 10 years, the Chinese government has done their utmost to ensure the sustainable development of tourism industry, taking a series of measures, including stepping up tourism promotion, developing more leisure facilities, and reducing air pollution. Besides, the government has enhanced communication with other countries to promote mutual understanding and sustain a stable cooperative relationship, paving the way for the new realm of tourism.

By 2020, Chinese millennials are expected to reach 300 million strong. They are members of a truly unique generation. They are living in a period of stability, and have witnessed the rapid development of China that their economical grandparents might have never imagined. Unlike American millennials, Chinese millennials do not have the burden of student debts. Having grown up as the only child of their family, they went to college with their parents' support. Many Chinese households own their homes, and many of these homes are owned without mortgages. Chinese millennials are not all wealthy, but they do find many luxuries affordable now. That is why Chinese millennials are spenders.

the codes on the shared bicycles in order to use them. This is a familiar sight in cities in China today – the phenomenon of sharing bikes.

Sharing bikes is so common in China today that people are beginning to take it for granted. Fewer and fewer people buy bicycles but just download apps to use shared bikes. The advantages of sharing are not difficult to see. It saves money! You are not burdened with ownership and do not have to worry about things such as bike-theft which used to be a big problem. There are, however, disadvantages as well. Sometimes, sharing means inconvenience and could also mean losses for traditional businesses as consumption decreases.

I prefer sharing to owning. Firstly, sharing provides me access to things without financial burdens. I don't need to pay a lot of money in order to enjoy the convenience of a car. Secondly, sharing alleviates me of the responsibilities of ownership. I don't have to worry about the maintenance of a car for example. Thirdly, sharing enables me to enjoy more varieties of luxuries such as designer clothes and cars. Lastly, sharing is environmentally friendly. Sharing things such as cars, books, toys greatly reduces waste. Although some people may say that sharing a car or your home with strangers could be risky, I believe that as long as you stay alert and take enough precaution, the advantages of sharing still outweigh the disadvantages.

As a coin has two sides, sharing has advantages and disadvantages; however, I believe that sharing helps to make a greener therefore better world.

It's more beneficial to encourage their children to make full use of their professor's office hours to discuss academic progress in a particular course.

If parents really want to provide their children with the opportunity to pursue their goals and encourage independence in their children, they should give support from a healthy distance.

Philosophy is deeply rooted in Chinese culture, and the zodiac, combined with the principles of yin and yang and the theory of five elements, asserts a remarkable impact on people's decisions and beliefs. If you ask the Chinese if they believe in the zodiac, many will initially say, "No, no. We are modern." But if you ask them when they want to give birth to children, they might say, "It's not a bad idea to have a Dragon baby." In 2012, the Year of the Dragon, the birthrate in China increased by five percent. And with a traditional preference for baby boys, the boy-girl ratio that year was 120 to 100. These individual family-by-family decisions might seem small-scale, but they cause an actual fluctuation in consumer demand and influence the economy.

Subject: Peking opera

Talking about China, people think of Beijing, its capital city. Talking about Beijing, many think of Beijing opera, also known as Peking opera, a staple of Chinese cultural tradition even in the modern era.

新一代大学英语（提高篇）综合教程1

Peking opera has a history of nearly 200 years. Through the integration of various types of opera, the present Peking opera evolved and came into being. It is a form of storytelling through which the actors and actresses keep the history of China alive with their vivid costumes and vocal performances.

There are many distinctive features of Peking opera. For example, its characters. As Shakespeare said, "All the world's a stage, and all the men and women merely players," the stories of Peking opera consist of mainly tales of preceding dynasties: important historical events, emperors and empresses, ministers and generals, geniuses and great beauties. A combination of action, singing, dialogue, mime, acrobatic fighting and dancing is employed to depict different characters and their feelings. Their images are vividly manifested in bright costumes that show the styles of ancient China.

There are currently five main role categories in Peking opera. They are Sheng (生) - Male role, Dan (旦) - Female role, Jing (净) - Painted face male, Mo (末) - Male role of middle or older age and Chou (丑) - the comedy role. Any role in these categories or sub-categories can be the leading role in a play. Except the second category - Dan (旦), the other four categories are for male characters.

Since Mei Lanfang, the grand master of Peking opera, visited Japan in 1919, Peking opera has become increasingly popular with people all over the world. It has made an excellent contribution to cultural exchanges between China and the rest of the world.

Seeing is believing. The unique charm of Peking opera is that the more you watch the same show, the more you read into it, therefore the more you can find about the depth and glamor of it. If you want to learn more about Chinese stories, you can enjoy a show when you visit China. This traditional performance art still shares a large role in preserving Chinese culture today and for generations to come.

Mobile apps have fundamentally transformed nearly every aspect of our lives, from personal to business, from fitness to banking.
- While we enjoy the convenience and comfort that mobile apps have offered us, we shouldn't overlook the negative impact they have on our lives. First, as our lives are filled with mobile apps, our moods and behaviors are changed by them. Second, as we are overwhelmed by the information provided by mobile apps and kept busy exploring new apps, we are so easily addicted to them. It is common that people are glued to their smartphones. Last but not least, apps put us at risk when they collect data about us – personal and sensitive information, for example, our location, accounts, address books and phone calls.

It is still under discussion which area is the "Silicon Valley" in China. Shenzhen is regarded as the hometown of entrepreneurs; it is the place where the most well-known high-tech companies in China were founded, such as Tencent, Huawei, and ZTE. Beijing also boasts its culture of entrepreneurship, characterized by places such as Zhongguancun and Software Park; it is the hub of the most well-established Internet companies in China, such as Baidu, Netease, Sina, and Sohu. In recent years, the city where Alibaba Group is head quartered, Hangzhou, has risen to prominence as another hub of high-tech start-ups in China; the city is most well-known for its prosperity of e-commerce. All these cities embody the spirits of Silicon Valley: innovation, energy, entrepreneurship, high-technology, and hard work for the pursuit of dreams.

Tencent is a typical high-tech start-up in China, specializing in various Internet-related services and products, entertainment, AI, and technology. Its most well-known services and products include Tencent QQ, WeChat, and Tencent Games. The company was founded in 1998 in Shenzhen, and now it has grown into one of Asia's most valuable companies with continued revenue growth each year.

Tencent has remarkable strengths of technology innovation. The core to its innovation process is the rapid launch-test-improve cycle. Rather than nailing down a full-fledged product before its launch, its development team routinely launches ready-to-use new platforms with limited functionality and collects user feedback to improve the final product. To achieve this, the company has created channels to encourage user feedback, to rapidly communicate this to the Research & Development team, and to ensure that the product architecture and design process is sufficiently flexible to incorporate new functionality quickly.

Companies like Tencent enhance the ability of the Chinese economy to achieve accelerated innovation, with rapid scale-up, low cost, and good quality across a wide range of industries.

I would like to add one question: Are you ready and determined to commit yourself to the start-up? The reason is that to start one's own business requires devoted efforts and perseverance. People should have firm faith in what they are going to do and make strong personal commitment to it.

It is reported that 82% of universities and colleges in China have opened innovation and entrepreneurship courses. Take Tsinghua University as an example. Tsinghua University strives to enhance students' involvement in innovation and entrepreneurship. The university has built several platforms to ensure students' access to on-campus entrepreneurship resources. For example, the x-lab based in the School of Economics and Management is a platform that offers business expertise to ambitious students. The university has also opened several cross-disciplinary courses, aiming to promote productive collaboration between students from diverse disciplinary backgrounds.

I'm a major of management. I often make friends with students from other disciplines when attending College English courses. I think collaboration with students of different disciplinary backgrounds can help generate brilliant ideas. For example, in the Academic English for Business course last semester, I worked in a group with a student from the School of Economics and another from the Mathematics Department. Our task was to work out a solution to the show rooming problem of BestBuy and make a group presentation about the project. I proposed the BCG Matrix for the industry analysis, the one from the School of Economics

College education is one of the best investments one ever makes in life that can guarantee decent rewards. It develops students' ability to think analytically, perform consistently, communicate effectively and work collaboratively. Students are encouraged to explore multiple fields and gain substantive knowledge in a particular field, and consequently the deep learning in college hones their minds to being open enough for a lifelong learning which is important for professional growth and development. Apart from the academic study, students are exposed to a variety of people and social experiences in college. They can meet people with different backgrounds and make new contacts. Overall, college helps to create a well-rounded person with better academic and social skills.

Good morning, ladies and gentlemen. I'm Effy Wong and I'm glad to have the opportunity to speak to you today about what I expect from college experience.

Every year millions of freshly minted high school graduates look beyond the summer vacation toward their new life in college. Last year, I was one of them. Why do I choose to attend college? There are a couple of reasons.

On the one hand, I want to have a fresh start in life and college is a good chance for me to come out of the shell of my old self. I can go out, meet new friends, join clubs, make connections, build networks and develop lifelong relationships. It is fascinating to experience new things, and to enhance my personal growth.

On the other hand, college education offers me a tremendous opportunity to learn what I am truly passionate about and I can explore a variety of subjects in greater depth than I did in high school. The involvement in research and academic studies provides me with an opportunity to do challenging work in a competitive atmosphere that will improve my thinking skills.

During the four-year study at college, which can be the best years of my life, I expect that I can gain deeper insights and attain broader perspectives of the world. I expect that I can confidently express and embrace new ideas. I expect that I can master critical thinking skills and have the ability to respond to, analyze and find solutions to a problem. Moreover, I expect that I will be able to interact with different people I may come in contact with in my future professional life.

In summary, I want to make college the best experience in my life. I want to taste the true independence. And I want to get every ounce out of my college and become more able to deal with the complex world in which we live.

In 2017, there were 7.49 million university graduates in China. The number hit a new high and showed severe situation in employment. Due to the fierce competition, more and more people choose to take graduate programs to continue their studies. To adapt to the new situation and increase the competitiveness of graduates in the job market, many universities have dual degree programs. The flexible advantages of the two majors enable many graduates to broaden their employment channels and find jobs easier.
